An English Dog Whose Intelligence Is Simply Marvelous.

Many people in Brighton, England, are interested just now in watching the clever work of "Strip, the Electrician," after laying down many miles' length of copper wire, for the purpose of electric lighting, in London, has lately come to Brighton with the same object. Lest Mr. Edison should not at once recognize the name of his "collaboratrice," says the London Graphic, we will explain at once that "Strip" is a clever little fox terrier, the property of protection of that company's night watchman. Strip's method of working is as fol again. What's the cause this time? An- lows: The workmen lay down in the desired position a short length of the Dealer Oh, no, sir, no combine, I as-ure you.

stout iron pipe which is to shelter a cor-responding length of the copper wire, along which the electric current will' ultimately pass. The iron pipe having been fixed. Strip is called, has the end of the copper wire fastened to her collar, and, at the workman's sign, goes in at one end of the pipe-"and comes out at the other end," says an intelligent but too hasty reader. Not so, however, The other end of the iron pipe has a bar norms it, over which the copper wire must be strained to keep it taut. Strip. "I really don't know, sir. Guess it baving entered the pipe with the wire fastened to her collar, presents herself at the other end to the workman awaiting her there, who thrusts his hand under the bar, unfastens Strip's collar, and draws it and the wire out.

Strip, when she feels her collar gone, turns round, retraces her steps, comes out again at the same end she went in at, and lies down on the workmen's coats until she is wanted again. During the recent bitter cold weather Strip sometimes longed to shirk, and showed
